

Oak Meadow School Class of 2014

Here's what some of our graduates from the class of 2014 are doing after high school:

Dakota Antelman is graduating from Hudson High School and will be attending Emerson College for Journalism. He is graduating high school with many local, regional and national awards for journalism and has already been already working in the industry, hired by Community Advocate, a regional newspaper, as a reporter when he was 16. He is still a reporter for the paper, as well as an assistant to the editor. He also works for the local access television station as a production assistant.

Victoria Hodgkinson, a senior at Lawrence Academy, will embark on a gap year before continuing her education at Connecticut College in September 2019. She will spend the fall semester in the East African countries of Kenya, Uganda and Tanzania living, learning, working and exploring and will spend the spring semester in a language immersion program, studying in Malaga, Spain.

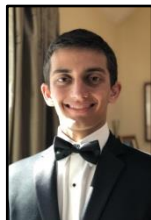

Delaney McKenna is graduating from Nashoba Regional High School with highest honors. She will be attending Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute and has been awarded the Rensselaer Medal Scholarship. She plans to study biochemical engineering.

Andrius Alvarez-Backus is graduating from the Cambridge School of Weston and will be attending The Cooper Union in New York City in the fall.

Clara Perrine is graduating from The Westover School in Middlebury, CT and will be attending Lewis and Clark College in Portland, OR.

Kiran Tremblay is graduating with Honors from Middlesex School, where he received the Robert C. Lea Crew Bowl. He will be attending WPI in the fall, and has been named a Global Scholar and awarded the WPI Presidential Scholarship.
